

MTA agreement as expressed in the Putnam Greenway ULURP passed in 2011

“Though not part of this application, the rail tracks between West 230th Street and West 225th Street are owned and still in use by the Metropolitan Transportation Authority (“MTA”). The MTA will continue to maintain and use these tracks until at least 2013, after which time DPR is planning to lease the ROW from the MTA for the purpose of creating another segment of greenway that will connect to that of the current proposal. Eventually the goal is to have the greenway continue along the waterfront of the Harlem River, connecting to other existing and proposed greenways further to the south.

... The affected agencies and utilities were polled on November 24, 2008. No agencies expressed any objections to the proposal.”
